Short-Term Housing

Don't Leave Home Without Them. We found ourselves in need of quick, short-term, furnished housing this year. Trolling the temp-housing websites, like everything having to do with real estate in Manhattan, was a disheartening experience, until we hit on nyhabitat.com. The website shows you clear—and, we discovered, realistic—snapshots of available furnished rooms and apartments. Written descriptions, prices and dates of availability were also no-bull, with none of the bait-and-switch tactics rental agencies are so infamous for in this city. We picked a couple of potential spaces, and a friendly and efficient agent showed them to us promptly, with no nonsense and no hard sell. She hooked us up with a brand new efficiency, in the neighborhood of our choice, at a decent price. We took it for six months, and when we needed to extend our stay a couple more there was no hassle. It was perhaps the least stressful, most straightforward real-estate experience we've ever had in Manhattan.
